CHEAP SUGAR.

Since men began to make sugar it has never been so cheap as it is to day. The depreciation in prices is not confined to one country, but is common the world is so cheap as to be almost a drug on the market and this fact has set theorists to considering whether it may not (on account of its cheapness) be utilized for or use in the various manufacturing industries where it is now called into requisition. The London Times recently published an article going to show that const quantities of sugar and time, mixed together in water, made an admirable cement. This suggestion calls to mind the accounts we used to read of the us setter to send white men to represent and it was ra sed in such abundance that it was cheaper (as a fuel) than either wood or coal. Experince tends to show that both would be improved if the people had a more direct influence power in determining the c choice of senators. The suggestion of a means of bringing this about was afforded in the recent Nebraska can-rass, when a vote was taken to determine the preference of the people between rival candidates for a seat in the senate Should this become an established prac-tice in any state, there is little doubt that the legislature would speedily be con-strained to make the popular choice its popular nominations and a popular vote to determine the general preference, the legislature would become, so far as the election of senators is concerned, merely a means of ratifying the choice of a majority of the people, just as the electoral colleges have come to serve a similar purose in determining the vote of the states for president and vice-president.
